

E-Learning

5th Grade

Day 13

The Farmer, the Snake, and the Eggs and Bacon

by Vinnie Rotondaro

The farmer woke up just as the sun crested his windowsill. Rays of light poured over his face. His eyelids cracked open.

The farmer lifted his rough, powerful hands to his face and began to rub away the last of his dreams. Yawning, he pushed himself up onto his bottom and shook his head. His hair was a mess. He swung his legs off the bed, rose to his feet, straightened out his body and shot his arms into the air, stretching this way and that. It was time to start the day.

He had a mean hunger that morning. Truth be told, the farmer had a mean hunger every morning. Farm work is hard work, and for this farmer, like any other, breakfast was the most important meal of the day. "It's like putting a big old log on the fire," he often said about the meal. "You get that one big log on, get it burning real hard, and that fire will keep going all day long." That's how the farmer viewed breakfast. Eat something healthy, and eat much of it.

"What should I eat this morning?" the farmer thought to himself.

He thought and thought, rubbing his chin with those rough, powerful hands of his. Then it hit him.

"Ah," he said. "Eggs and bacon."

The farmer didn't always eat eggs and bacon. Too many eggs and too much bacon too often isn't a healthy way to start one's day. But eaten every now and again it is a great way to get a healthy dose of protein, which is especially useful when one has much work to do - as the farmer often did.

"Yes," the farmer said to himself. "Today I will treat myself."

He was giddy at that thought. There was nothing better in the farmer's estimation than two farm fresh eggs cooked over-easy and laid atop some bacon strips. The sight of it, the smell of it, the taste of it - the whole of it just gave the farmer that good and happy feeling. It filled him with love for life.

The bacon had been curing for some time in a shed outside his kitchen, and was ready to go. The eggs were another matter. The farmer would have to go to the chicken coop to collect them. So that's what he decided he would do.

The farmer slipped on his overalls and laced up his boots and put on a broad, round-rimmed leather hat. He combed down his bristly beard and pulled his long, stringy hair back into a ponytail, and walked out the door.

The chicken coop was a short distance away from the farmhouse, down past the pigpen and the garden.

"I'll be picking some of you," the farmer thought as he passed the lettuce patch. "And some of you," he thought passing the tomatoes. "And you I already have," he thought, passing the pigs.

But something seemed off when he neared the chicken coop. The chickens were making a fuss, clucking and flapping and swirling about all together in a corner of the coop. Usually they were relaxed, but this morning, no, they weren't relaxed. Something was wrong.

The farmer grew suspicious, and when he got closer, he saw what was wrong. A big, black, mean-looking snake had snuck into the coop.

"A snake, great," the farmer thought. "Okay, let's get to solving this problem."

"I'll need to find a long stick," he thought. "Preferably with a hook on the end of it."

The farmer was almost put in a bad mood by the turn of events, but he tried hard to keep a positive attitude - to keep that love of life coursing through him. He darted off to the woods and spent a couple minutes rummaging around through the brush. Then he found it - the perfect stick, long, strong and hooked at the end.

"Eureka!" he exclaimed.

The farmer ran back to the chicken coop with the stick in hand. He opened the door to the coop and poked at the snake. He was far away enough not to risk getting bitten, and it hissed and stabbed its head out, showing its fangs.

The farmer poked at it again, and this time, when it shot its head out he started pulling the rest of its body along with the hook on the end of the stick. Scooting back with his feet, he pulled that snake plumb out of the chicken coop and then whacked the snake on the butt.

"Get outa here you stupid snake!" he yelled.

The farmer shook his head in disbelief. "The things I have to go through to get some eggs and bacon," he thought.

Then he thought about what lay in store for him, and his eyes opened wide with anticipation. He grabbed two eggs, darted back to the garden, picked some lettuce and a tomato and ran to the shed where he kept the cured bacon.

The food was bundled up high in his hands as he nudged the farmhouse door open with his foot, and walking into the kitchen, he let it all fall out onto the big wooden cutting board he had by the stove.

"Ready to roll!" the farmer said.

He washed the lettuce and the tomato, and cooked up the bacon. When it was crispy he took it out of the pan and, using the leftover fat, he cooked up those eggs.

"Man!" the farmer said, laying the eggs overtop the bacon, alongside the lettuce and tomatoes. "Man, does that breakfast look good!"

anticipation an · tic · i · pa · tionAdvanced Definition*noun

1. the act or process of anticipating.
2. expectation or hope.
3. foreknowledge; intuition.

Spanish cognate

anticipación: The Spanish word anticipación means anticipation.

These are some examples of how the word or forms of the word are used:

1. Shaving an angry, anxious cat is a nearly impossible task. Clara continues to drool in dreaded anticipation.
2. He glanced at the bleachers filling with parents and younger siblings, fans and groupies, all bubbling with anticipation for the big game.

collect col · lectDefinition*verb

1. to gather together.

The teacher collected her students' work.

adjective & adverb

1. requiring payment for a telephone call from the person who receives the call.

I called her collect.

I made a collect phone call to my sister in Hawaii.

Advanced Definitiontransitive verb

1. to gather together or assemble.

I collected the various papers that were lying on the desk.

2. to accumulate and make a collection of.

He collects stamps as a hobby.

3. to call for or obtain payment.

The landlord came to collect the rent.

4. to make (oneself) calm or prepared, esp. after being disturbed or disrupted.

Still shaken from the frightening incident, she tried to collect herself.

intransitive verb

1. to gather together or assemble.

People began to collect in front of the church.

2. to accumulate.

Snow will collect up to ten inches tonight.

3. to obtain payment (usu. fol. by on).

It's time to collect on the money he owes you.

adjective & adverb

1. requiring payment from the person who receives the message.

I called him collect.

She made a collect call to her parents.

Spanish cognate

coleccionar: The Spanish word coleccionar means collect.

These are some examples of how the word or forms of the word are used:

1. In most civil cases, people are suing to collect money from someone else.
2. While watching living things you can also collect information that can help you answer your questions.
3. Rain barrels can be used to collect rainwater. This water can be used for watering gardens and lawns.
4. Bees are flying insects that collect nectar and pollen. There are over 20,000 known species in the world.
5. They rowed when the river became narrow and shallow. They clung for their lives when the river fell into steep rapids. Some days they had no trouble; the river was wide and calm. On those days they climbed the canyon walls to survey the area and collect specimen or supplies.
6. Porter decided to dress like his favorite superhero, Batman. A black mask covered his face and a long cape trailed behind him. They carried plastic pumpkin bowls to collect candy later in the evening.
7. A polar bear has special fur to keep it warm. Each hair is shaped like a straw. The shape helps direct sunlight toward the bear's black skin. The black skin collects and holds in heat.
8. Katherine bends down to help him collect his things. "Are these yours?" she says.
9. On nice days, the caretaker would send my grandmother out to the rice paddies to collect slugs.
10. Some creatures were so tiny that scientists had to use the fine hairs of a paintbrush to collect them.